The Global Nature Positive Summit, 8-10 October 2024

The first Global Nature Positive Summit is going to be hosted in the International Convention Centre (ICC) in Sydney on 8-10 October 2024. Co-hosted by the Australian federal and New South Wales state governments, the main agenda of this summit will be to address issues about biodiversity loss and restoration of Australia's natural environment.

As found in the 2021 State of the Environment Report, there is a need for a significant investment in conservation and restoration to reverse the decline in Australia's natural environment. One solution that has been implemented is the Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework, which sets a target of US$200 billion funding per year to spend on nature repair by 2030.

The 3-day summit will feature plenary and breakout sessions, interactive forums and site visits of various topics with environmental restoration at its core. The summit aims to boost private sector investment to protect and repair our environment. Furthermore, this will bring together leaders from government, corporate sectors, research and environmental organizations and Indigenous Peoples, in order to achieve steps towards biodiversity conservation.

Connecting the brightest of minds will surely help the global effort for improving the environment!
